

Instructions

The Right to Information and Protection of Privacy Act (RTIPPA) provides a method to request general or personal information held by public bodies that is not available by other means. A request for general information is a written request for records of a non-personal nature that could be released, in whole or part, to anyone. However, this right is not absolute. If information in a record falls within an exception to disclosure, an applicant is not entitled to access this information. Examples of general records include briefing notes, contracts, etc. RTIPPA requests for general information allow you to make a single request to a public body. An example of a request for general records is:

A copy of the agreement and/or contract between Party X and the Department Y for management consulting services provided from April 2012 through March 2013.

A request for your own personal information is a written request for records of a personal nature about you. Examples of records containing your personal information are child and family services files, adoption records, employment records etc. An example of a request for personal information is:

A copy of all documents related to my (Name of Applicant) assessment for X benefits by the Department Y (File #12345) from January 2016 to present date (Date Z).

Public bodies make a lot of their information available to the public through websites and printed documents. This information can be accessed without making a formal request for information under RTIPPA. Before making a formal request, contact the Coordinator of the public body you believe has the information you want to access. The Coordinator can help you determine if a formal request is needed. The Coordinator can also help you complete the request for information form, if needed. For contact information for Coordinators see the Directory of Public Bodies.
